

Roles and Competencies in Consulting

As a development practitioner, the service we provide to project partners and stakeholders lies in dialogue, advice and consultation to co-create sustainable and effective solutions. The more complex our global challenges are, the more difficult our work become. Sector knowledge and expertise alone cannot support us to be successful in our role as advisor.

This training emphasizes the personal dimension in designing advisory processes taking into account the intercultural implications, helping you to work more efficiently and successfully. The training is one of key qualification training for any seconded/international expert working for German international cooperation. Now we in Asia have access to this consulting know-how which can help you building up partner cooperation and better shaping the project results.

Date: 22-26 August 2016 (batch 1)

29 August-2September (batch 2)

Venue: Bangkok

Course fees: 2,110EUR per person*

“Excellent training and a very good experience! Excellent work for the course design and the trainer. The training is so useful and really implementable. This is among the most wonderful training that I have joined. We already know how to apply the learning in our daily work to improve our advice and consultation provided to partners and client”

Training approach

You will be working with the following techniques, which you will also use as an advisor/consultant:

- Clarification of the assignment – the triangular contract,
- Reflecting on your own actions and the process,
- Feedback,
- Interviewing techniques,
- Reframing,
- Drafting hypotheses,
- Appreciative inquiry

Training methods such as video feedback and interactive dialogue supplement the above.

Who should attend this training?

Development practitioner, project staff (recommended course for National Personnel in Band 5 and 6 – Band 4 welcome), project expert and consultant working in public or private sectors
